2. General provisions

In blood tests, substances contained in the blood are (among other things, antibodies) measured and analyzed. The result is then interpreted by the laboratory and a recommendation for action is created (e.g., abstinence or desensitization therapy). The necessary sample is obtained from a finger puncture.

3. Sampling

Should the referring physician not have the authorization to carry out a blood test, the customer needs prick themselves in the finger with the available lancet. It is within the remit of the customer to thoroughly clean the place, according to the instructions and immediately consult a doctor for proper treatment in case of infection.

4. Disclaimer

The recommendations drawn up by these analyses should be considered as a recommendation or inspiration for the treating physician. You should clarify any acts relating to your health with your doctor. The laboratory is not responsible for the effectiveness of the recommendations, health consequences of recommendations, health consequences of not proper sampling or financial damage that has arisen subsequent to this analysis.
